Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Citizen s Duty in the Present Crisis This ought to have been done at the Last session of Congress; and it ought now to be done at the earliest practicable moment. The President and those who support him hold this view. I do not adopt this doctrine; and if you will give me your candid attention, I will just as candidly state to you some of my reasons. First, I find in this theory what seems to me an improper assumption or executive power. - The rebel States, for whose immediate representation the demand is urged, have been reconstructed, if at all, exclusively under the authority of the President himself. He, and he only, has fixed the terms, without any legislation on the part of Congress to guide him. He did not consult Congress, but proceeded at once to solve the problem immediately after the Rebellion was crushed. The military part of the struggle was ended; and hence the President was not fighting battles, or adopting war measures for the purpose of conquest, but rather undertaking to reorganize civil society. What right then had he, upon his own authority, and merely as the Executive of law, to decide this whole question, and especially so to decide it as to bind the action of Congress? None whatever. General Dix, though he favors the President s policy, nevertheless expressly concedes that his action was not in pursuance of any constitutional power. I agree with this opinion. I am no lawyer, yet I can not for the life of me find the Presidents constitutional authority for his course of action. The Article of the Constitution referred to...
