Time, swiftly flying, not alone doth seize The meadow s blossoms and the forest s leaves, The radiant freshness and the power of youth, Its direst spoil is in the world of thought. What once was fair or noble, rich or good, Worthy of any toil or any pain, Is now revealed so colourless and pale, Hollow and void as were we void ourselves. But still tis well with us, where er the spark Within the ember gleams, and when the heart Whilom deceived, unquenched glows fresh again. This very glow itself in fact is truth, The picture higher than the subject s self, More real the semblance than reality. Who sees the truth, has really known to live, For life is like the stage, for here as there, The curtain drops when the illusion fails. SCHILDEIS. A Fragment....
