Excerpt from The University of Chicago: A Sketch In 1891, a complete prospectus of the University of Chicago, worked out in detail, was sent to more than fifty American colleges and universities for criticism. When it was learned that the proposed university had not yet broken ground, a ripple of smiles spread over the educational world. These plans, however, were as far as possible from being visionary; they were previsionary - products of the thought of men who were building for a large future, and who wished the foundations laid broad and deep. This policy of forethoughtfulness is perhaps more characteristic of the University of Chicago than any other one thing. It is evident everywhere - in plans for building, in the relations of the University with other schools and colleges, in the arrangement of curricula, in the guidance of social tendencies - wherever one chooses to look. And not only in the present, but from the beginning this method has prevailed in shaping the University. When, in 1886, the old University of Chicago, founded by Stephen A. Douglas and a number of others, passed out of existence, and a successor was discussed, Chicago was decided upon as the site, not merely for traditional reasons, but because everything pointed to the future of this city as most suitable for the future of the proposed institution. The old University had been a protege of the Baptist denomination, and a college rather than a university. But from the first the new one, while cherishing the memory of the old, was to be a very university both in the freedom of its thought and in its scope.
