Excerpt: . located below the separator for the liquid to drain into. This tank should be provided with a water jacket, with steam connection to keep the water hot for the purpose of re-evaporating the liquid ammonia, the gas piped back to the suction side of the compressor. In this way the tank serves the double purpose of converting the liquid from the separator into a gas and purifying the ammonia by separating out the oil or water that may have been taken into the system by leaks or inferior ammonia and the oil that works into the system from the compressor. When the liquid from the separator is carried back to the evaporating coils, there is practically no loss from this source, as the liquid is re-evaporated and will do useful work in the transfer of heat, but the beneficial results of leading the separator drain to a purifier will more than offset the gain by the other method of re-evaporating the liquid in the coils. Another system for removing liquid from the separator is to connect the drain line to an automatic drip tank and pump which is operated with a float and returns the liquid to the expansion or evaporating coils, the operation being the same as that of a pump and receiver used in a steam plant for returning condensate to the boiler. Keating Water in Open Tank What method can be used for heating 1,000 gal. of water per hour, from 60...
