Excerpt: . prophecy of the two Witnesses, in which Mr. Elliott so distinctly sees the history of the Reformation in the sixteenth century, animate those tried men who were engaged in it! This consequence cannot be evaded. I repeat, then, that, according to Mr. Elliott, only as converted by fulfilment into history has the Apocalypse proved profitable for instruction. And how startling an admission! True, indeed, on this very ground, until some twenty years ago, fulfilled prophecy only was esteemed worthy of study by the mass of professing Christians, and that in order to convince Deists of the Being and Revelation of God; whilst to occupy the mind with unfulfilled prophecy was deemed speculative and presumptuous in the extreme. But who would have thought of such a mature student on the subject, as Mr. Elliott professes to be, practically serving up this exploded notion; in connection, too, with an exposition of the Apocalypse, to which the solemn preface is, Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, for the time is at hand. Now, how does my Reviewer answer this? He does not, be it observed, grapple with my position and proceed to overturn it; but appearing at first to admit it, that is, that Mr. Elliott's system of interpretation compromises the value of the Apocalypse as unfulfilled prophecy, he endeavours to prove that the same may be said of the Futurist system which is advocated by me....
